Exploring Careers - A Mentor's Story

Today I left mentoring with that great fuzzy feeling we all enjoy so much. At our last mentoring session, one of my mentees expressed an interest in forensic pathology. She was unsure of her options in the field and I told her I would do some digging. As a student of Wayne State University, I knew there were options in this line of work at Wayne. I put together a packet of information with job duties, salary data, and open-house events at Wayne State for high school seniors. I dropped it in the mail and hoped my mentee would find it useful.

relentlessly to help bring new businesses into Marquette, MI and to help expand existing ones. Amy writes news articles for the Mining Journal which she uses to inspire her readers to stay informed, speak out, and take action on important issues relating to the success of the community. Amy also helped to organize the Lake Superior Leadership Academy, which brings together potential leaders to discuss community needs and to prepare youth for leadership roles. In 2004 she helped start the Negaunee Nets Basketball Club.

Today she came in and said "Thank you so much for the information! I read it over a million times!" She even told me how she involved her dad in it, and he would like to take her to the open-house program.

It truly brought a smile to my face. This is why I chose to be involved with Winning Futures. If I can open the eyes of even one student to career options, my time has been well spent. Knowledge is power and nobody can take that away from you!
